With the recent strong promotion of the needle-free drug-injecting devices, there has been a demand for a safe and reliable mechanism for detecting the nozzle-opening and closing by a user. In the Patent Document 1 listed below, there is disclosed a basic configuration of the needle-free drug-injecting device equipped with an ear-hook and configured to detect the nozzle-opening and closing by being hooked in the ear-hook. The Patent Document 1 has an advantage in that a blood vessel in the ear is inserted from the ear-hook into the blood vessel in the arm, and the whole ear-hook is opened so that a micro-blood is sent into the same hole with the nozzle of the drug-injecting device and then the drug-injecting device is moved to the predetermined position. This makes it possible to directly detect the opening and closing of the nozzle by detecting the amount of the blood to be ejected in conjunction with the ejected-blood amount. However, in the above basic configuration of the needle-free drug-injecting device, there occurs the problem that the user keeps on keeping on keeping on holding the ear-hook until the blood vessel reaches the position to be inserted into the blood vessel in the arm, i.e., the problem of a cumulative operation of the nozzle-opening by the user. In order to solve the problem, the Patent Document 2 discloses a configuration in which a number of perforated part is provided in the ear-hook and the whole ear-hook is shaken or oscillated at a frequency in the vicinity of the natural frequency of the ear-hook.
